Is Religious Faith Blind?

Key terms

Blind faith: believing or trusting something without good reasons, or in spite of evidence against it.

Reasonable faith: believing or trusting something on the basis of good reasons, even without complete certainty.

Imagine an atheist says:

"I think that religious belief is blind faith, in the absence of evidence, even in spite of contrary evidence"

What might a Christian say in response?

How might the atheist reply to that Christian response?

What is your own view, and how do you justify it?